a state court, were not entitled to absolute immunity from § 1983 liability. Recognizing the need to accommodate the federal interests of vindicating a federal right, the Court in the same opinion, noted that in some circumstances a federal judge could be subject to liability for an alleged judicial act: "[W]here a judge acts in the 'judicial' capacity of determining disputed claims of entitlement to property or possession of property,... the judge is not liable for such acts, even though he misapplies or ignores the law in performing these functions." 422 U.S. at 803, 95 S.Ct. at 2589-2590. The Court went on to stress that it was not addressing the question of judicial immunity from liability for acts that are not judicial in character. 422 U.S. at 806, 95 S.Ct. at 2591. In the case at bar, we have no doubt that the defendants did not act in a judicial capacity, either as the initial decision makers or as the decision makers when their recommendation was sustained. At the time of the determination of the Board of Directors, there was no pending case involving social security benefits; the appeal had not been decided by the Social Security Administration. At the time the Secretary decided not to reopen the determination of the Appeals Council, the state proceedings were still pending and neither the Bureau of Hearings and Appeals nor the State Social Security Office had rendered any decision on the merits of plaintiffs' claim. Furthermore, even if defendants had acted in a judicial capacity in the original determination of plaintiffs' claim, that determination is not a final adjudication entitled to absolute immunity from subsequent review. While the initial determination may be appealable to the Secretary, there is no evidence that the Board of Directors of the Bureau of Hearings and Appeals or the State Director had ever considered the matter and rendered any decision on the merits of the claim of plaintiffs. Therefore, if defendants have acted at all, they have acted in a purely administrative capacity. Hence, even if defendants were entitled to absolute immunity from liability for some of the acts in question, they would not be entitled to immunity for all of their acts, and would still be subject to suit for damages resulting from their actions. Since this court has already found that the defendants have not acted in any capacity other than that of an administrator, their immunity does not extend to such acts. In the absence of absolute immunity and other defenses, the plaintiff has a remedy in damages and the court must therefore determine what
