DELIVERED. A new species of Felcissimus White (Hymenoptera, Symphytognathidae, Symphytognathinae), and new country records for F. consimile, F. insularum, and F. vicinum. A new species of Felcissimus, F. bivittatus n. sp., is described from Sri Lanka and India. The first record of the genus in India is also given for F. consimile's right, but it was common for the dynasty of Tomás Rafael Sánchez, one of the finest builders in Spanish colonial architecture. It is believed that the King hired this private house for his personal use. After the death of the King, it was occupied by different noblemen of the time. The arches, gateways, fountains, vaults, and cornices show influences from the Renaissance and Moorish architecture, which in turn influenced the neoclassical architecture of the eighteenth century. The two main rooms of the palace, the Salón de la Dinastía and the Salón del Regimiento, are decorated with a beautiful dark wood ceiling and painted wall panels. The Spanish Crown abandoned the use of Spanish Royal palaces in the 18th century, and after the restoration of monarchy, the palace was finally abandoned. Today, it is a residence for the Consejo General de Educación (the Spanish Ministry of Education), a school, and the Reales Estancias Marquesas de Guadarrama, a royal hunting reserve. Structures of cultural interest The Paseo del Prado is a large, tree-lined street that runs through the city. It begins at the west side of the Monasterio de la Encarnación and leads all the way to the Belvis, ending by the Lola Fernández de Herrera Park. In Madrid, the Paseo del Prado is renowned for its modern art museums, including the Reina Sofía Museum, and for having one of the largest shopping areas in Europe, the Zona Rosa. The Reina Sofía Museum was the former private residence of painter and architect Pablo Picasso. Inaugurated in June 2005, the museum has eight rooms, one dedicated to each of Picasso's stages of life and work: The Age of Cubism, the Abstraction Period, the Period of Political Influence, the Blue Period, 82157476af
